CSA stands for community supported agriculture. Urban Grains uses this model because we believe it is ideal for fostering a strong consumer/producer relationship. It supports the farmer up front with capital to grow the crop, guarantees a market and helps to cultivate a local, sustainable food system.

It is important to be aware that the CSA model has an inherent degree of risk built into it. While every effort is made to ensure success, this cannot be guaranteed. As a customer paying the share cost before a finished product is delivered, an investment is being made in the entire process. Uncooperative weather or other factors beyond our control could lead to a sub-par harvest, resulting in each member receiving less than their 20 kg share.

In the event of catastrophic crop failure which left us unable to deliver ANY shares to our members, members would be reimbursed 50% of the share cost. The 50% that Urban Grains would retain would be used to cover farm expenses and administrative costs. Jim and Diane at Cedar Isle Farm are very appreciative of the support of the Urban Grains members and would not keep the full payment if they were unable to deliver the shares.
